

Little Malcolm and His Struggle Against the Eunuchs

David Halliwell

Men respond to me. They sense something in me. I wish I wish I had a shilling for all the men I've been out with. It's every age group as well. Even married men with kids are drawn to me. Sometimes I try and restrain myself knowing the havoc I'll wreak in these men's lives but it's no use. The whole fabric of these men's lives is cast away for one savage moment of ecstasy. One man can't satisfy me for long enough I have to move on. I just can't help myself. There was this lad at this party and he was husband of some jazz singing who'd come over from Leeds.

He moved with rhythm like a panther. When I got there he was by himself at one side he seemed detached from it all, bored and cage in by all the other women. Then he saw me ! And there was this immediate recognition, sparks flashed between us our eyes mated. He was transformed. Well I thought I'd let things take their natural course. I'll let him come to me. I won't make it easy for him. I'll let him hunt me down. So I got a drink and chatted to people over the other side of the room. Not looking at him but all the time sensing his presence coming nearing being drawn in. Sure enough I turn and there he is trembling by my side. We didn't speak. There was no need for Mundane words. Before we knew it we were clasped together pulsating. Our moths gnawed at each other. His lips engulfed me. Our tongues conversed with a wet wanton wildness, withering like twisted angry snakes. He suddenly bit into me tongue. Sinking his teeth in the spasm of pain shot through me. But it wasn't like ordinary pain. It was an ecstatic flame. And before I knew it we were upstairs in a bedroom. And he'd unzipped me. And he was squeezing and then m tearin off his shirt and he's wrenching off my pants onto the bed, and we fuse together and Huddersfield dissolves Yorkshire disappears the twentieth centaurs thes only this moment this act of pure savage elemental brings. There in that room. Just this furnance. Just this entertaining just this.